Salary & Report &

2022 has just gone by and another Tap.Talent 2023 Salary Report has been published. Like in the previous years, we are presenting trends in the labor market in relation to the remuneration of employees and employers branding activities.

Past year brought us another set of many disruptive forces affecting economies and businesses in the Euro-Zone with one of the most critical challenges companies approached was access to talent. The pandemic changed employees' attitudes to work-places and influenced the job changing decision making process. Internal development and employment security became the two most important factors across every industry in Poland and the rest of the labor markets in the EU zone. Another highly important labor market factor is Russia's invasion of Ukraine which caused price hikes in energy and food sectors and ratcheted up pressure on the cost of living and business continuity.

In such difficult conditions finding and hiring talent is a challenging task to undertake yet retaining an existing workforce is even more important to consider for employers.

Based on our talent hiring experience and carried out market research projects we saw a few noticeable trends in the Polish recruitment market. First is the continued growth of the technology sector, an increasing number of technology start-ups, and further expansion of nonfinancial services sectors such as eCommerce, PaaS providers, Data Science and Cybersecurity Security. The second trend was a technological transformation initiated by various companies especially those in the production industry. Companies decided to strengthen data protection infrastructure, increase remote access connectivity, and invest in creating its own internal business applications. A third trend that grabbed our attention is the massive shortage of skill sets (which explains the increased number of available jobs on the market y/y) in professional services, technology, logistic and production areas. The most sought-after experts continue to be IT professionals, digital marketing specialists, gaming engineers and artists, and business services experts in accounting and data analyses.

One of the most important employer branding trends in 2022 was that companies more often saw employer branding initiatives as an integral part of the HR function. Awareness of the importance and positive effects of employer branding projects and programs has increased. Companies realize that creating a positive and unique employee experience is paramount for the development of an employer brand that is desirable among top talent.

We hope our 2022 Report will not only provide you with useful and actionable salary advice but will also give you insight into employer branding trends in 2023 that will bring your recruitment efforts to the next level.

What will happen to the IT sector in 2023?

The pandemic has forced an acceleration of digital transformation. In the past two years, demand for the use of digital technologies has increased. In 2023, this trend will undoubtedly continue. The process of digital transformation will continue to grow in public establishments, but also in private companies or large corporations.

Remote work is already common enough that the development of platforms and tools that allow people to work outside the office will continue in the coming years.

Artificial intelligence and machine learning will continue to grow in importance in 2023. Al already allows processing data and provides assistance in everyday life (shopping, fitness training, etc.). So-called chatbots are also based on advanced artificial intelligence and their key objective is to improve interaction with customers and help with data storage and processing.

In 2023 high demand for the most popular programming languages such as Java, C#, C++, Python, will be imminent.

High inflation will have an impact on candidates' financial expectations, forcing employers to increase salary budgets.. IT professionals will want to have a choice related to the form of employment. Employment based on a B2B contract will continue to be common, but in 2023 it will be noticeable that some contractors will choose or consider an employment contract.

What will happen to the business services sector in 2023?

The pandemic time was a difficult time for many industries, companies, and employees. Remote work became a standard for many and strongly influenced the candidates' expectations. An increasing number of candidates subject their decisions related to employment to companies' policies concerning remote work possibilities.

The employers who will not offer possibilities of fully remote work must expect they can lose their best candidates and face difficulties when trying to hire new talent.

Another factor that has significantly affected the labor market that should be mentioned is the situation across our eastern border. The buisness service sector has also felt its effects. Ever since the war broke out, the number of investments in business services sector has dropped. What we predict for 2023 is that the industry will regain it's market growth trend, and unfreeze its investment budgets. Because of prolonging war across our eastern border companies that had branches in Ukraine or Belarus will be looking to Poland as an alternative place for their operation.

IT professionals are most likely to find work in the buisness service sector, but not only. Professionals, especially those with extensive experience in finance, customer advisors or HR, will also find interesting offers. Companies continue to look out for specialists that have ability to use foreign languages. Fluency in English is a standard and the other most demanded languages are still German and French. We also notice that Scandinavian languages, like Swedish, Norwegian, or Danish, are gaining in popularity.

NOLUS SINERIUS SECTION

What will happen to the engineering sector in 2023?

Engineers have an innate curiosity about why and how things work, and this curiosity drives the engineering field forward to explore new ideas and solutions. But as the world collectively turned toward a more digital life during COVID-19 lockdowns, engineers faced a massive learning curve as they worked to rapidly develop, integrate, and scale the digital technology and components needed to meet new global demands.

As pandemic life becomes the norm, the focus on building out digital capabilities for everything from fabrication and logistics to customer service will continue to spur growth in mechanical engineering.

According to IBM DTA — 67 percent of manufacturers had accelerated digital projects because of the pandemic. The most important new projects listed by respondents included:

- The development of new digital design tools
- Creation of automation programs for manufacturing, logistics, and service systems
- Strengthening of remote work and collaborative software platforms and applications

While AI, robotics, and additive manufacturing will likely be the primary technologies driving all fields of engineering for the next year and many more ahead, software and electrical engineers will be in a high demand on the Polish market in 2023 year.

What will happen to the sales and marketing sector in 2023?

The last 2 years have shown that the marketing and sales industry is not only thriving, but also does not succumb to crises such as the corona pandemic or an unstable geopolitical situation.

The recent situation of isolation and the consequent need to move marketing activities online has made it increasingly important to build brand recognition and create marketing and sales strategies based on new media, such as social media platforms and e-commerce.

According to a study conducted in 2022 by the Influencer Marketing Hub platform, almost 70% of people use the Internet to obtain information about a product's quality, manufacturer or comfort before making a purchase. This trend is reflected in the labor and salary market. Positions and courses of study based on knowledge of "new media" and conscious use of them in building marketing and sales strategies are becoming increasingly popular.

In the 2023 year we are sure to see an increase in salaries among online marketing specialists who are proficient in the environment of Instagram, Tiktok, online campaigns and the creation of engaging content.

What will happen in 2023?

Given the current economic market situation related to the high cost of living and the shift of work to online environments after the pandemic, one can see a change in many organizations, particularly when it comes to salaries. In this section we will focus on the C-Level group, i.e., employees that work at the highest level in the company. Examples of positions belonging to the C-Level could be CFO, sales director, managing director, production director, sales manager, customer service manager, marketing or HR manager.

So how do the salaries of the above roles compare? Consider that 2022 is fraught with a high cost of living due to many changes in the economic market. These factors are contributing to increased salaries in all sectors. In the case of the top positions, the aforementioned increase is not as large. Why? It is worth noting the specifics of the above group of employees. When deciding to change jobs, they are guided by their own needs and expectations. They pay more attention to the quality of work, projects, the scope of independence and the condition of the company. Of course, base salary and bonuses are important aspects, but the most important factor is the personality fit with the organization. Following in the footsteps of the many market changes brought forward by the pandemic, it is also worth noting the current situation in Ukraine. The war has contributed to the relocation of many people to Poland. This group also includes workers with very extensive experience looking for a new job. C-Level people often negotiate working conditions, are willing to travel across the country and abroad, work remotely, or relocate to another city.

In presenting the C-Level group, one more thing should be noted. People at this level are crucial to the organization and are the hardest to find in the labor market. Mainly because of the fit between the employee, and the policies and values of a particular company. Therefore, many organizations want to be flexible and increase the salaries of employees year after year. Taking into account the above-mentioned factors taking place in the market, salaries for top-level employees in 2023 may increase by about 10%. Certainly, many companies will be open to workers from different Polish cities, but also from Ukraine. Changes will take place not only in wages, but also in benefits, or in the company's self-reliance and responsibility.

Recruitment trends and tips for 2023

Remote work is here to stay

Research tells us that 85% of recruiters believe remote work is here to stay. Obviously, the pandemic drastically changed the work environment. The acceleration to remote and hybrid work has helped companies realize that remote work offers benefits to not only the workforce, but to the companies as well. These companies have used remote work opportunities as a strategy to attract candidates to apply.

Recruitment Tip: Whenever possible, let candidates (and employees) have the freedom, convenience, and cost savings that remote and/or hybrid work gives them.

Power Skills Are The New Skills

What exactly are "power skills" we're hearing about? We know that hard skills refer to technical competencies that have to be learned, can be measured, and are often tools like software. Soft skills are referred to as more relationship-centered covering areas such as communication, emotional intelligence, teamwork, professional attitude, and work ethic. In today's remote and hybrid work environments, employees are expected to work in a state of constant change and adjustment. However, this can be challenging and have an impact on performance. Soft skills are more important than ever and are even being referred to as power skills.

10 power skills:

Communication
Innovation
Creativity
Emotional intelligence
Collaboration
Adaptability
Leadership
Time management
Work Ethic
Listening

Recruitment Tip: Power skills are essential for an always changing workforce. Elevate them as the top skills that are key to be successful within your company, no matter which level of position.

Your Reputation Precedes Your Open Positions

A majority of job seekers research an organization's brand and reputation before they consider applying for a position. It wouldn't even matter if they receive a higher salary, candidates say they wouldn't work for a company with a bad reputation.

So, recruitment is forcing HR professionals to learn some marketing skills. It's important to remember that reputation isn't just about the name, logo, or marketing materials created for your company's brand. It goes deeper. That's why it's critical to keep on top of what people are saying and writing about your organization.

What affects your company's brand and reputation?

There are several factors that make up a corporate reputation, including:

Ethics

— does the company behave with honesty and decency toward its employees, customers, vendors, and other stakeholders?

Employees

—does the company have talented, skilled, and competent employees that perform well?

Workplace

- does the company have a vibrant culture that supports its mission?

Finances

— does the company have a record of growth and profitability?

Recruitment Tip: Treat candidates as customers through relationship management. This can be done through email campaigns, providing interesting content on the website, and engaging in discussions on social media.

It's Not What You Know, It's Who You Know

Believe it or not, most companies hire 20-40% of their new hires through referrals. That's a terrific way to limit your cost per hire. But not only that, people that have been referred by either employees or other external contacts tend to stay longer and perform better. Is it too much to say that employees are your best recruiters? Let's think about the benefits of an employee referral program. Employees have organizational knowledge, understand how the positions play a role in the overall structure, and can see how a referred candidate can fit into the company culture. Typically, they know the referral's work ethic, personality, experience, and skill set too. Many organizations offer monetary awards, paid time off, and other rewards for excellent candidates.

Recruitment Tip: Want a win-win-win situation? Set up a candidate referral program as an efficient way to hire new talent. You gain a great candidate, the candidate gets a great new job, and the employee has been motivated with a great reward.

Talent acquisition leaders know the importance of social media in recruitment. What trends can you expect in 2023 — and how can they support you in developing a shining hiring strategy?

No personal branding on LinkedIn? Need not apply

Personal branding isn't a new concept, but in the age of influencer marketing the approach has come to the forefront, even in an employer branding context. But what about employee branding? To put it simply, your personal branding is your reputation whether you're aware of that messaging or not. However, it's becoming more important to be intentional about who you brand yourself to be, particularly on LinkedIn. What sort of culture are you creating for your employees in the workplace? Do you have initiatives in place which encourage diversity and inclusion? If you're not creating content to address those questions in one of the most competitive employment markets in recent history, the chance is that you're not setting yourself apart among the talent force. If you're an employer and not deploying marketing to separate yourself from the noise, the chance is that you're not attracting talent effectively. LinkedIn's platform interface has shifted more to a traditional social media platform, with an endless scroll of content. It'll soon become a requirement to leverage content marketing practices to remain relevant.

Big changes for Twitter on the horizon

By the end of 2023, Twitter ambitiously wants to add 100 million daily users to the site – about a 50% growth from where it is now. That means: either Twitter has a big plan to draw users to the site and gain momentous attention, or Twitter is really in trouble and trying to dig itself out. Twitter has admitted there's not a sign-up problem; it's monetizable daily active users where there hasn't been exponential growth over the last several years. It appears that there are either sweeping changes on the horizon or it might be a fall of the once-prominent social space. One thing is for certain, for better or worse, Twitter as we know it is going to change.

Facebook will become young and cool again With the pandemic forcing students to interact with their classmates solely online, students had to create new ways of interacting with peers that allow for separation from their personal pages/personas. Enter the rise in Facebook groups. They're an easy, private way to communicate with many people, making them perfect for segmenting your social media presence. Groups will continue to thrive, even as campus attendance increases, mainly because they're easily hidden from the eyes of those who made Facebook uncool to start with, making

Evolving perspective on influencer marketing on TikTok

Facebook groups a must-have for your early talent campaign.

With over a billion videos viewed every day, TikTok is a social media powerhouse. Influencers and brands have flocked to this ever-growing platform, which has 1.3 billion active users. Influencer marketing is the most effective form of marketing on TikTok since influencers can build trust with their followers and are more likely to recommend brands with confidence. Additionally, brands have a 93% higher engagement rate when they partner with creators. Influencers are ranked from mega (1 million-plus follower), macro (500,000-plus followers), mid-tier (50,000-plus followers), and micro (10,000-plus followers), each with a different marketing strategy so brands can choose which tier of influencer best fits their objectives. Influencer marketing is likely to play a larger role in the future as TikTok is producing new stars every day, allowing brands with smaller budgets to increase their audiences.

We need more video

Video continues its exponential growth. With the huge rise of short-form video platforms like TikTok, people will continue to consume and demand more bite-size video content from brands and creators. Brands will have to look at the way they hire and structure their teams to make sure they're prioritizing the quality and time of video content creation. In 2023, video consumption will not slow down and brands that aren't prioritizing this format or spending time building an audience on TikTok will fall behind.

It's an AR world on Instagram

Augmented reality (AR) will rule on Instagram with clever, creative enhancements to a candidate's digital identity and an employer's highlight of shared work environments. As AR graphics trend and become the new standard, they'll also become a new way to search and serve employer brand content. Imagine branded AR content being a part of virtual hiring events and interviews. This will be the ultimate bridge between the physical and digital worlds.
